

Franklin D. Roosevelt: A Great American Leader

Franklin D. Roosevelt, often called FDR, was the 32nd President of the United States. He was born on January 30, 1882, in Hyde Park, New York. FDR was a very important leader, especially during a difficult time in history called the Great Depression. The Great Depression was a time when many people were struggling with money and jobs. FDR wanted to help, so he came up with a plan called the New Deal. This plan helped create jobs for people and improve the country's economy. FDR was also the president during World War II, a big war that happened around the world. He helped lead the United States through this tough time. He is famous for saying, "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself," which encouraged people to stay strong during challenging times. One interesting thing about FDR is that he had a disability. His legs were not strong, so he used a wheelchair. But that didn't stop him from being a great leader! Franklin D. Roosevelt served as president for a long time, from 1933 to 1945, making him the only president to be elected four times. He passed away on April 12, 1945, but his legacy lives on, and he is remembered as a president who helped the country during difficult times.
